What is the Tone & Mood of each passage?

Rain thunked against the windows as Rupert woke up. The drops slid slowly down the windows, leaving gray smudges along the pane. The rain and howling wind seemed to tear even more paint off of the shutters outside. The clouds sunk lower in the sky, dumping more rain on the slick streets. He hated when the weather was crumby, especially on his birthday. He slithered out of bed and trudged to the bathroom, his eyes still heavy with sleep.

Rain tapped on the windows as Rupert woke up. The drops glided gracefully down the windows, leaving sliver streaks that sparkled with the tiniest reflection of light. The heavy clouds billowed in the sky, dumping more rain onto the lush green lawn. He wasn't happy about the wet weather, especially since he had planned to spend his birthday outside, but he was glad for the fresh spring air. He rolled out of bed and sauntered to the bathroom, swiping the last bit of dream dust from the corner of his eyes.
